Description of Property and Eligibility Determination: (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo)

The Edgewood Guardhouse, constructed in the early 1940s, is typical of World War II-era guardhouses erected at military installations throughout the United States at about the same. An isolated building, it is not a component of a larger district. As a common example of a standard building type, it lacks architectural and historical significance. Therefore, it appears ineligible for the National Register under any of the four criteria.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

This small utilitarian guardhouse was built to serve as a checkpoint for vehicles entering the Edgewood Arsenal from Edgewood. After the base became open to the public, the guardhouse was no longer staffed. It remains in good condition and repair.

The Route 755 Guardhouse for the Edgewood Area, Aberdeen Proving Grounds, is located on an island between the two traffic lanes of Edgewood Road at the north end of the installation. This rectangular, single story, gabled roof building is a single bay wide and three bays deep. The gable ends face the road while the side walls have central gabled entrance bays. The building appears to have been constructed of concrete coated with stucco. It is set on a concrete slab, and its roof is sheathed in slate.

Both gable ends are fenestrated with large, single light, fixed windows. These windows permitted the guards to view oncoming traffic. The side walls are fenestrated with one over one, double hung sash windows. The side walls of the gabled entry bays are pierced by rectangular, wood-framed openings that do not contain window sashes. The wood-framed doors have a single rectangular light in the upper section. A sign is placed in the north gable peak identifying the building. Both gable peaks of the main block are pierced by rectangular wood louvered vents. The gable peaks of the entry bays are sheathed in wood. The lower edge is defined by a shed-roofed pent.

The oval island on which the guardhouse sits is planted in grass and is landscaped with low bushes.

Lacking historic photographs of the building, it is difficult to assess the level and type of alterations. It is probable that the single-light, plate glass window on the south gable end represents a replacement for an original multi-light window.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

According to building inventories of the Edgewood Arsenal, this building was constructed in the early 1940s during the major personnel buildup at the installation that took place during World War II. The increased traffic at the gate and increased security concerns necessitated replacement of the former gatehouse located a short distance north on the east side of Edgewood Road.

Although a remnant of the major buildup at Edgewood during World War II, the guardhouse is not individually significant. It was constructed to a standard design used at installations throughout the United States at the same time. It is also significantly removed from the concentration of buildings forming the core of the installation. It is not recommended individually eligible for the National Register nor is it recommended eligible as a component in a larger historic district.
